CHICAGO STRIKE BREAKERS DRIVEN FROM HOME BY MOB

Chicago, Aug. 17.—A mob attacked a house occupied by new stockyard employees, all of them Poles, early today, compelling the occupants, six men and two women to flee for their lives in their night clothes. The house was wrecked the windows being shattered and the doors torn from their hinges. The six nonunion men and the women had come from Short Creek, Va. to work in one of the packing plants.

When the attack began the eight occupants of the house were asleep. Flying bricks, bottles, stones and other missiles gave them no time to dress, and they ran down the street with their clothes in their hands. Some of the strikers continued stoning the house while others pursued the flying and terror-stricken occupants.

When the party took refuge in a police station the women were on the verge of collapse and were so hysterical they could scarcely give a connected account of what had happened. The men were also much frightened.

A crowd that surrounded the branch house of Swift & Company, at State and Sixtieth streets, watching the loading of wagoons, was dispersed by the police today. The men ignored orders to move on and were then dispersed by force. Dominic Lavore was arrested on the charge of resisting the police.

PARKER WILL TAKE STUMP IN CAMPAIGN

Democratic Candidate Has Consented to Speak.

Judge Parker Will Deliver Speeches In Campaign at Chicago and Elsewhere.

Esopus, Aug. 17.—After a lengthy conference between former Judge Parker and a number of the local advisers, it was announced that the Democratic candidate for President would make speeches during the early part of the campaign at Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee. These speeches will be carefully prepared. He will make no impromptu addresses. It was also decided that Mr. Parker would go to St. Louis in October to attend the ceremony of New York State day at the exposition. He will be one of the principal speakers.

GRAND ARMY

Many of the Veterans Overcome During the Big Parade on Boston's Streets.

Boston, Aug. 17.—If anything were needed to prove that the Grand Army of the Republic is still in fact a mighty host, it was to be found when, with half a million civilians looking on, 26,000 survivors of the Union forces of the civil war, assembled here from all sections of the United States, marched through the streets of Boston. Five and one-half hours were required for the parade to pass a given point, and it was a severe strain on the old soldiers. More than three score of them dropped from the ranks from exhaustion and neat prostration, and were cared for at the field and civic hospitals. The death of one soldier marred an otherwise happy event. Colonel John P. Pyron, a member of John A. Dix post of New York, died from heart failure induced by exhaustion. At least 250 spectators, mostly women, fainted during the parade, and many persons were slightly injured and had their clothing torn in the crush.

Grand Encampment Special.
Chicago, Ill., Aug. 17.—The movement to the triennial convocation of the Knights Templars of the United States at San Francisco commenced by the departure from Chicago of one of the handsomest trains that has ever crossed the continent.

The train was composed of the most modern Pullman sleepers, including compartment, dining and observation cars, was made up in the Chicago & Northwestern station, and is designated the "Grand Encampment Special." It carries Grand Master Sir Henry Bates Stoddard and his official staff and members of their families, the party consisting of 143 persons.

CALLED OUT

Are the Men on Four Large Structures In New York By the Trades' Alliance.

New York, Aug. 17.—The Building Trades Alliance, the organization against which the lockout recently declared by the Building Trades Employers' association was directed, made its first move since the lockout was established by calling out all the men employed on four of the large buildings in course of construction in this city. The buildings affected were two big apartment houses, the "hippodrome" at Forty-sixth street and Sixth avenue and the new Wanamaker building on Broadway. Pickets were stationed about one of the apartment houses in an effort to prevent the employment of nonunion men. Many of the strikers declare that the contractors, after the strike was ordered, offered them double wages if they would remain at work, but the strikers aver that not a man was influenced to stay.

Threaten to Withdraw.
Pittsburg, Kan., Aug. 17.—There was a lack of harmony in the meeting of coal mine operators of the southwestern district here because of dissatisfaction of the operators of the north Missouri district. After adjournment the operators refused to discuss the proceedings, and it is not known what contention the Missouri operators made. It is said that the north Missouri operators threatened to withdraw from the association, and that they were told to use their own pleasure about the threatened withdrawal.

Went Over a High Cliff.
Divide, Colo., Aug. 17.—The mysterious disappearance of Frederick Smith of New Orleans and Jackson Wilson of Nashville, Tenn., who suddenly dropped out of sight in this vicinity four years ago, is believed to have been explained by the finding on a hill near Clyde of the skeleton of a horse and mule tied to a tree with bridles and saddles clinging to them. It is now believed that the two men met death by falling over some high cliff in the vicinity where the skeletons were found.

TO THE WOMAN

Who Nursed Him During His Fatal Illness the Rich Neighbor Left His All.

Toledo, O., Aug. 17.—Mrs. Herman Miller, wife of a Summit street grocer, is $10,000 better off than she was a week ago because of her kindly interest in George Sterling, an aged bachelor neighbor. The latter died last Thursday, after three years of illness, of diabetes. During that time Mrs. Miller attended him. Shortly before his death Mr. Sterling called Mrs. Miller to his bedside and gave her a sealed package, telling her not to open it until after his death. She attached little importance to it, and did not open it until yesterday. It proved to contain Sterlings' will, which bequeathed to Mrs. Miller all his property, "in consideration for kind-hearted favors shown in the past years."

DYNG

Is United States Senator Geo. F. Hoar at Worcester.

Worcester, Mass., Aug. 17.—An announcement was made today that United States Senator George F. Hoar, the venerable and famous statesman, is dying. Dr. Warren L. Goldman, physician in attendance, says the Senator's entire system is broken down and that he cannot live more than two or three days. The Senator's mind is clear, and he suffers no pain. His physical system is worn out and his recuperative powers are exhausted. There is no specific disease at work but the Senator is gradually approaching the end.

PLOT TO BLOW UP OHIO PENITENTIARY

Columbus, O., Aug. 17.—A plot to blow up the penitentiary was discovered today. In the hoc shop was found hidden away a pint of nitroglycerine and an eleven inch stick of dynamite fuses a .38-calibre revolver and many cartridges. That these reveal a plan by the convicts to blow their way to freedom the officials have no doubt.

A Jail Delivery.
Lockport, N. Y., Aug. 17.—This noon a jail delivery was made at the Niagara county jail. Two men named Imley, charged with a serious crime awaiting trial, were the ring leaders. Nine prisoners in all were liberated. It is reported. Only one has been recaptured.

France and the Vatican.
Rome, Aug. 17.—It is semi-officially announced today that the Vatican still hopes to find a way of getting out of the present difficulties with France in a way satisfactory to both parties without breaking the concordat. This plan is shown by the fact that negotiations are now on for the establishment of a new concordat which will not give rise to incidents such as have caused the existing rupture. It is reported that French Foreign Minister Delcasse is in favor of the plan.

Morocco and Great Britain.
Paris, Aug. 17.—Advices from Morocco point to the conclusion that the sultan's unpopularity with Great Britain in connection with the confiscation of the property of a British subject will shortly be settled amicably. In any case, the thoroughly cordial understanding between France and Great Britain suffices to prevent the incident from assuming serious proportions.

Fire in Asphalt Plant.
Philadelphia, Aug. 17.—The plant of the Barber Asphalt company in this city was damaged by fire to the extent of $50,000. Several firemen were overcome by tar fumes, but soon revived. The origin of the fire is unknown, but is believed to have been caused by an explosion.

Retail District Scorched.

Attacked the Retzivan.
Chefoo, Aug. 17.—A striking incident of the naval engagement of Aug. 10 was the surrounding of the battleship Retzivan by Japanese torpedo boats, the other Russian vessels having gone to the assistance of the Czar evitch, which was then hard pressed. The battleship Retzivan desperately attempted to break through the line and tried to ram a cruiser which approached, but she was fairly blown out of her course by a hail of shells from the cruisers, which began now participating in the fight. Every officer of the Czar evitch was either killed or wounded.

Pythians Parade.
Louisville, Ky., Aug. 17.—Under fair skies 26 brigades of the Uniform Rank Knight of Pythias, over 10,000 strong, passed in review before the people of Louisville. Over 100,000 people lined the route of the parade, three miles in length, and cheered the militant members of the order as they marched past in uniform or dress parade regalia, with scarlet plumes and glittering trappings.

Work of Safe Blowers.
Oskaloosa, Ia., Aug. 17.—Safe blowers wrecked the safe and building of the postoffice at New Sharon, getting away with $250 in cash and stamps. Entrance was effected through a rear door. Officers are in pursuit.

Idaho Democrats.
Lewiston, Ida., Aug. 17.—The Dubois Heitfeld forces regained control of the Idaho Democratic convention, routing the Mormon forces after a fierce fight. Former Senator Heitfeld was nominated for governor.

GERMAN GLEANINGS.

The Berlin police have arrested restaurant keepers for fraud for having dummy musicians in their orchestras.

German medical journals are recommending as a remedy for appendicitis walking on all fours twenty minutes four times a day. The exercise strengthens the abdominal muscles.

Efforts are being made in Germany to extract the alcohol from beer so as to obtain a drink which, while tasting like beer, is quite harmless. Temperance reformers are also trying to popularize American carbonated waters with fruit extracts.

When illustrated post cards first came into vogue the German authorities were inclined to discourage their use because it was feared that the postmen would waste time looking at them. Today they are welcomed as a valuable source of income, the annual sale reaching hundreds of millions.

A QUAIN AND PRETTY BAG.

Like an Old Time Reticule With Melon Seed and Bead Decoration.

The bag illustrated is a duplicate of a reticule made in 1870. The odd feature is the combination of melon seeds and steel beads.

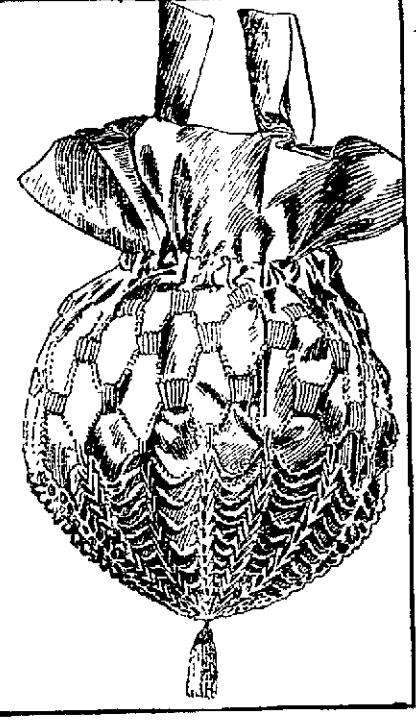

Select large plump looking seeds of the cantaloupe or muskmelon and wash them thoroughly. Spread them out to dry on a flat surface, turning them frequently. Four bunches of steel beads will be required, size No. 9. String the seeds and beads on linen thread, using as fine a crewel needle as possible.

Begin by stringing eighteen seeds together, passing the needle through the points of the seeds, and tie the thread in a firm knot, cutting off the loose end.

Second Row.—Run the needle through the round part of one seed of the first row and string through the points of two seeds, then through the round part of the second seed of the first row; then slip on one steel bead and repeat to end of row.

Third Row.—Seeds are strung in the same way as in the second row, but three steel beads are strung each side of the seed stripes.

Continue stringing seeds in the same manner as in the second row, with an increase of two beads to each row, until there are thirteen rows. The third teenth row should have twenty-five beads between each seed stripe. This ends the striped pattern.

BAG IN RETICULE SHAPE.

Fourteenth Row.—String thirteen beads, then the points of six seeds, thirteen beads, then through two seeds and repeat to end.

Fifteenth Row.—String thirteen beads, six seeds, thirteen more beads. Put the needle through the round top of six seeds and repeat to the end of the row. The sixteenth row is to be the same as the fifteenth, and this ends the diamond pattern.

For the lining take a piece of straight silk the size of the headwork around the top. Stitch a three inch hem and a casing to suit the width of the ribbon used for strings. It is preferable to use a soft silk for lining, so that it may be gathered into the bottom to fit closely. A bunch of beads forms the tassel at the bottom.

The Delicatore, the source of the foregoing, suggests that many variations in design may be made by combining different colored beads with the seeds.

A Useful Cake Recipe.
This rule is the foundation of a great many cakes, and it is so easily and quickly made that for general purposes it cannot be excelled: Beat half a cup of butter and a cup of sugar to a cream; add two eggs, one at a time, and beat until the mixture is very light; next one and a half cups of flour, a half cup of milk or water and a level teaspoon of baking powder. Add first a tablespoon of flour, then liquid and flour alternately, mixing the baking powder thoroughly with the last quarter of a cup of flour. Many prefer water rather than milk as it keeps the cake fresh longer. Bake in two layers or in a sheet.

Cheese Balls to Serve With Salad.
Mix one and one-quarter cupfuls of grated cheese, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, a speck of cayenne, one tablespoonful of flour, the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Shape into balls, roll in soda cracker crumbs, fry a delicate brown in deep hot fat. Serve cold on a platter.

Fashion's Echoes.
Very full skirts and Louis XVI. coats are in favor for taffeta silk costumes.

A little color is introduced in the white taffeta silk gowns.

The old fashioned pin striped silks have come again.

Valenciennes lace frilled around a fancy button to form a rosette is among unique decorations.

Tuckings, shirrings, ribbon ruchings and lace motifs run riot in the season's garnitures.

Heliotrope, pale gray and white are combined with black in dressy gowns.

Buttons are very important trimmings this season.

The surplice front bodice is quite in favor.

The bolero still holds its own. The festoon flounce is one of the newer modes of using lace.

Ponchee and slanting are chosen fabrics for evening wraps.

A return of the old time convenient tailor suit, snug fitting and with long, tight sleeves, seems assured.

It is predicted that the nodding Prince of Wales feathers at the side of the hat are to replace the familiar trailing plumes and hat trimming.

The deceased was employed by Dairyman J. M. Southard, and was chopping wood in Southard's woods about a half mile north of Cedar Hill cemetery on the Wilkins road. He did not return from his work, and when nothing was seen of him all night long, alarm was felt and a search was made. His body was soon found and brought to the city in Powers & Bradley's ambulance, and turned over to Undertaker William Evans, who prepared it for burial.

The funeral arrangements have not yet been completed.

PRINTED

By the Lightning Stroke on His Breast Was the Perfect Facsimile of a Tree.

Butte, Mont., August 17.—After lying senseless for two hours from the effects of a stroke of lightning, Harry Sweet, an employee of the Western Union Telegraph company, recovered consciousness and to the surprise of a physician and all who were with him there was discovered the perfect reproduction of a tree on his breast. The outline was in vivid red and perfect in detail, branches and leaves being exact in their formation.

'Sweet went to Anacanda yesterday to the Eagles' picnic and during the afternoon entered the pavilion. As he stood in the office of the dance hall a tree in the vicinity was struck and from the shock Sweet was knocked insensible.

Sweet recovered consciousness only after the application of powerful restoratives. When he had recovered he complained of pains in his chest, and when it was bared the strange imprint was clearly seen.

Little Chance for Republican Fat-Fryers.

Evidences are in abundance that it will be difficult this year for the Republican campaign managers to pluck and plunder the legitimate business interests of the country. It can no longer be maintained with any degree of reason or argument. That the election of Judge Parker involves menace or disaster to the legitimate business or industrial interests of the country can not be maintained by the Republican fat-fryers.

It was vastly different in 1900 and 1896. Then a business scare and panic was as easily created as campaign lying. No intelligent business man will heed such attempted alarm this year, with the candidates and platforms of the Democratic party before him.

Then, too, Mr. McKinley had announced his purpose to promote a larger export trade, which would insure longer life to the season of National prosperity. This has been changed to the Bourbon idea of standing pat, and the embarrassment and danger to the business interests come from the Republican party rather than the Democratic.

Parker is a guarantee of safety. Roosevelt is a danger.

The prospect is that the people will be thoroughly disgusted with the law abolishing spring elections by the time they get through marking the blanket-sheet ticket next November.

Lines are being clearly drawn in the campaign. It is the fantastic, bombastic politician against the seasoned jurist and statesman.

Democratic Prospects.

The Washington Post, Independent, truly says that not since the civil war has the Democracy entered upon the campaign with such omens of success. The Tilden campaign—out of whose result the people were cheated—the two Cleveland campaigns which were successful, did not present such a prospect at the outset.

The people want a safe, sane man in the White house to direct the for-times of the republic as its chief executive, instead of an erratic, impulsive rough rider.

Before the issue as you may, this is the point on which the election will turn.

Judge Parker grows in strength with the Democratic party and the people every day, and the longer the campaign continues and the better the people know him, the more he will grow in their favor.

An Aged Clergyman's Contribution.

Mr. Peabody, treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, states that the first campaign contribution he received as treasurer was from an Episcopal clergyman, over 80 years old. The clergyman wrote that while he did not know whether he would live to vote for Parker and Davis, he wanted to send a dollar bill, all he could afford, with the hope that the campaign fund would be made up of the dollars of a million voters, rather than the larger gifts of rich men.

EVERY COURTESY

Will Be Shown to Mrs. Florence Maybrick When She Lands in New York City Saturday.

New York, Aug. 17.—When Mrs. Florence Maybrick arrives in New York on the steamer Vaterland, next Saturday, she will be extended every possible courtesy by the immigration officials, and no objection to her landing will be made on the ground that she is an alien or has been convicted of felony abroad.

Orders to that effect have reached Ellis Island. Previous to the arrival of Commissioner of Immigration Frank D. Sargent's letter of instruction Assistant Commissioner of Immigration Joseph Murray announced that he would bar Mrs. Maybrick from landing. When Commissioner Sargent was informed over the long-distance telephone of Mr. Murray's statement he said:

"Mr. Murray will carry out the instruction regarding Mrs. Maybrick which he will receive from this office. I have written him a letter, which he should receive today, ordering him to extend every courtesy to Mrs. Maybrick, to facilitate her landing and to regard her as an American citizen, with every right as such."

HERDING THE FILIPINOS.

Spanish Concentration System in Force on Island of Samar.

Manila, Aug. 17.—Gov. Wright has issued an order directing the concentration of the inhabitants of the Banos, Catbaloman and Gandara River districts of the Island of Samar, ordering the island authorities to quell the disturbances there, and to suppress the roving bands of natives, and instructing the authorities to provide shelter and food for the reconcentrados and to punish all engaged in the disturbances.

One of the chief causes that led to the United States to interfere in Cuban affairs and go to war with Spain was this same horrible concentration system. Thousands of helpless Cubans were driven from their homes and herded into towns, leaving large districts depopulated. The same system is now in vogue in the Philippines, under the present administration of the United States government. How can fair minded Americans tolerate such inconsistency?

SUMMIT STATION.

The four months old child of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Wycoff is very poorly at this writing, with but little hopes of its recovery.

As Reno Sagers, manager of the skimming station at Jersey, was bringing the cream to the Summit creamery, he stopped his horses at the corner of South Main and Harrison streets, and went into the new store room of Dickerson Bros. During his absence an automobile came along and frightened the horse and ran away. The creamery wagon was turned over.

Humors

They take possession of the body, and are Lords of Misrule. They are attended by pimples, boils, the itching tetter, salt rheum, and other cutaneous eruptions; by feelings of weakness, languor, general debility and what not. They cause more suffering than anything else. Health, Strength, Peace and Pleasure require their expulsion, and this is positively effected, according to thousands of grateful testimonials, by Hood's Sarsaparilla which radically and permanently drives them out and builds up the whole system.

SENATOR DAVIS IS NOTIFIED

prevented the invasion of her sacred soil, by the products of the Jerseyman, Marylander, and Delawarean. We ought to have encouraged interstate trade by stopping it as much as possible. Each community on the face of the earth, sir, should raise everything which it possibly can't, regardless of the cost to its people of making and raising it, and if they will not raise and make everything of their own accord, then the people ought to be taxed until somebody consents to accept the profits of the new created industries for the altruistic purpose of giving them away to American, British, Italian, and other labor.

How in the world it has happened (though I confess it did happen) that during colonial times, when there were no custom houses between the several colonies and when all the products of great Britain had free access to our markets our laborers yet worked at wages very much higher than those which prevailed in Great Britain I cannot understand. How it has happened since we became a federal nation that the comparatively pauper negro laborer of central Mississippi has not been able to run the high priced white labor of central New York out of the farming business I cannot understand. Nor can I understand how it is that wages in California should have been for years two or three times what they were in Maryland, although the products of the comparatively pauper labor of Maryland had free access to California and although that comparatively pauper labor itself was secured by the constitution in the privilege of migration to, and sojourn in California. Stranger yet, the pauper labor of all Europe was daily flocking, both to Maryland and California. I do not understand—I doubt even if Uncle Joe Cannon himself can fully understand—these foolish facts.

I am reminded of another blunder in our ancestors, both under the common law in Great Britain and in the United States. They seemed to have entertained a notion that combinations in restraint of trade, seeking monopoly and throttling competition, are in some way adverse to the development of individuality, and somehow poison the life of trade.

They went so far as to contend that the highest objects of man's existence is not to be well managed, even at a living money profit to himself but that it is to learn to manage himself well. We know now that combinations of corporations, seeking with the power of monopoly, the resultant power of taxing consumers by raising prices to an extortionate figure, under the shelter of tariff laws, shutting out foreign competitors; and seeking the further resultant power to bear down the price to be paid to the farmer raising the raw material and seeking the yet further resultant power to regulate wages by reason of the fact that the working man has nowhere else to go to get work except to the concerns in the combination—are on the whole beneficial institutions in a free republic or self-governing men. They may appear to be doing some harm, may appear at first blush indeed to be blocking that great opportunity for individual effort which you enjoyed sir, when you advanced in an unfinished life time from the position of brakeman on a train to that of a leader of men as a railroad and industrial captain and which many a country merchant become now a merchant prince, also once enjoyed. Great combinations of industrial corporations seeking industrial control we now know to be "industrial evolution" necessary to modern development and it is blasphemy against Almighty God himself to contend against this. His law of evolution. Among all the reversals of historical blunders of the past I boldly aver that we need not despair of the republic.

After referring to the President's foreign policy, Mr. Williams said: "What a queer, old time, childish idea was that of our ancestors that the President of the United States is simply a chief executive, and that his duty consists in executing laws as they are written. I need not tell you sir, that when you are elected Vice President it will be one of your duties as a sort of heir apparent to the crown to train yourself and to influence your chief—Judge Parker—in the way of usurping the functions of the other departments of the government. Your opportunity will not be so great as that of the President himself, but as President of the senate you may have some opportunity: the opportunity of changing the senate rules on your own motion, or doing some other revolutionary thing, which, as a play to the galleries will make your good, old Welsh name famous as that of one of the most spectacular and strenuous of men. It will be your duty as part of the executive branch of the government to look down with contempt upon the legislative branch. You will soon learn that the 'cattle' who inhabit the senate chamber, and the other wing of the capitol, the lower house (which has been getting constantly lower every day for many years) are but little, if any, better than the other cattle who scot them there—the farmers and mechanics, and doctors and preachers and merchants of the United States. As to the common herd which sent these cattle to Washington, all you need to do is to talk platitudes about 'civic righteousness' and the 'strenuous life.' What they want to do is to see the galleries and witness the play. Make yourself the star performer according to your opportunities. Remember, especially, that all prosperity amongst the people is due to government and that government in taking with the hand of taxation from one man in order to house the property of another, has, in no way or other benefitted and enriched both. Do not stop to explain how this is possible. It would take too much time. It might, besides, be embarrassing. If anyone is impudent enough to insist upon knowing how it could possibly come about, tell him that you are not teaching a kindergarten, and tell him, moreover, that it is your duty to 'do things' and not to be bothered with any consideration of whether you are doing them right or wrong.

"In conclusion, sir, pray for war. Nobody can tell what great things war will end in when once begun. It might result in making your chief the first 'emperor and lord protector of the Western hemisphere.' You would, of course, in that event, as his apparent, share his glory. I know you would run some little risk of having him designate his secretary of war as successor, but I believe I would chance it. Besides, peace is a tame and unheroic thing and 'smothers out some of the finest instincts of manhood.' Who was the fool who said, 'war is hell,' anyhow? My word for it he never saw a real war. Remember, above all things, that our chief duty as citizens is not to be 'weaklings' or 'cowards.' Weaklings are men who fear the 'strenuous life, the only national life that is really worth the living.' We are getting to be as a people, your committee is glad to say, splendidly military.

"It has been a pleasure to us to do our duty to notify you of your nomination. This has been a pleasure notwithstanding the fact that you have all, in a manner, been notified by Hon. Elihu Root, who, while pretending to notify Senator Fairbanks, could not get his mind 'off'n of you,' as the darlings say.

"In real conclusion, Mr. Davis it is a sincere pleasure, indeed, to know and to be able to help to place in high position a man of your character and sense and modesty; a man who, as the result of a life of continence, temperance, self-containment and useful and honest industry, presents a picture in virile, though advanced age of that mens sana in corpore sano which is a delight to the eye, a satisfaction to the soul, and was taught by wise ancients to be the summum bonum of individual earthly existence."

When Mr. Williams concluded, he was given hearty approval, the applause merging into an ovation to Mr. Davis as he was about to begin his speech of acceptance. The speech by Mr. Davis was somewhat brief. Following are excerpts from his response:

"The official notification which you bring of my nomination for the Vice Presidency of the United States by the national Democracy, gives me a feeling of the sincerest gratitude to my party for the honor conferred. At the same time it brings to me a deep sense of my responsibility to my party as a candidate and to my country in case of my election.

A spirit of determination to succeed in the before us, and to be able to make the rank and file of our party in all sections of the country. Of that rank and file I have for many years been a member and have at all times devoted my heart and power to party success, believing that success to be for the country's good.

Is it not significant of a closer and truer brotherhood among us, that for the first time since the Civil war a nominee of the national ticket has been taken from that section of our common country that lies south of Mason and Dixon's line?—a happy recognition of the obliteration of all sectional differences which I have and followed that unhappy struggle.

I desire to say that I heartily endorse the platform upon which I have been nominated, and with the convention and its nominee for president regard the present monetary standard of value as irreversibly established.

The Republic's new claim great consistency in their attitude upon the currency question, and the president's recent speech of acceptance, said that they know what they mean when they speak of a stable currency, "the same thing from year to year," and yet in the platforms of their party in 1884, 1888 and 1892 they favored the double standard of value. In the platform of 1888 they said: "The Republican party is in favor of the use of both gold and silver as money, and condemns the policy of the Democratic administration in its efforts to demonetize silver."

I congratulate your committee and the constituency it represents in the selection by the delegates to the national convention of you for the presidency. He is a man of courage, yet prudent; of high ideals, yet without pretense; of the most wholesome respect for the constitution and the majesty of the laws under which we live, yet with a keen sense of justice, which would rebel against compounding a wrong to an individual or to a nation; positive in conviction, yet of few words; strong in means and moral attributes, and yet withal modest and reserved; possessed of a sturdy constitution and magnificent manhood, and yet temperate in his actions and dignified in his demeanor. It is not the orator or man of letters, but the man of power, force, of sound judgment, of conservative method and steadiness of purpose, whom the people have called to the office of the presidency, notably in the contests between Jefferson and Adams, Jackson and Clay, Lincoln and Davis, Grant and Greeley, Cleveland and Blaine.

should succeed and the principles of Democracy again triumph. I beg my countrymen, as they value their liberty, to guard with great care the sacred right of local self government, and to watch with a jealous eye the tendency of the times to centralize power in the hands of the few. In the language of our platform, "the rights of labor are certainly no less vested, no less sacred, and no less inalienable than the rights of capital." The time is opportune to emphasize the truth of this utterance. The most sacred right of property is the right to possess and own one's self and the labor of one's own hands—capital itself being but stored up labor. For years I worked in the ranks as a wage earner and I know what it is to earn my living by the sweat of my brow. I have always believed, and my convictions came from the hard school of experience, that, measured by the character of work he does and the cost of living, a man is entitled to full compensation for his services. My experience as a wage earner, and my association with labor have alike taught me the value of Democratic principles, for from the time I was a boy I have known security for individual rights and the highest stimulus to that independence of spirit and love of self help which produce the finest private characters and form the base of the best possible government.

It will be my pleasure and duty, at a time not far hence, to accept more formally in writing, the nomination which you have tendered in such graceful and complimentary terms, and to give my views upon some of the important questions now commanding the attention of the country. Immediately after the speaking an informal reception was held, and the remainder of the day was devoted to political discussion in groups and among the leaders. There will be a "notification ball" in the evening.

Toads sit at night around the bases of electric light poles along the country roads of England, waiting for the fall of the dead, injured and partly cooked moths which have alighted on the hot globes above.

It is estimated that 400 houseboats may be found upon the Thames and its backwaters. Some of these are very gorgeous, and resemble miniature floating palaces.

Three spectres then threaten baby's life. Cholera infantum, dysentery, diarrhoea. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry never fails to conquer them.

CHAPTER VIII.

ON Monday there were ever increasing rumors through the town that Charles had signed the bill which would send his chief minister to the block, qualified by statements equally vague that he had done nothing of the sort. But as night drew on the rising jubilation of the crowds in the streets gave point to the more sinister report. In the evening, his usual time of calling, the somber Vollins came to the inn, chiefly, as he said, to urge the girl to quit the turbulent city, where she could accomplish nothing and where she might be in danger were it once guessed that she bore any relationship to the condemned man, but to this good counsel the girl would not listen.

What she demanded impatiently was news, news, news, and this, with exasperating deliberation, Vollins gave forth. It was quite true that the bill was signed, not by the king's hand, but by the hands of four commissioners whom he had appointed for that purpose. The house of lords and even the house of commons was amazed at this betrayal, said Vollins, and the effect of the announcement had been seen on the populace itself, for after certainty came home to the people they had dispersed quietly to their houses, and the streets were almost empty.

The girl was mute with dismay, but Vollins pointed out that the case was in reality no worse than it had been on Saturday or Sunday. By the exercise of his prerogative the king could at any moment free his minister or mitigate the sentence, notwithstanding the fact that the commission had signed the bill of attainder in his name.

Tuesday seemed to bear out these surmises. Frances determined to see the king once more and learn from his own lips the fate of her father, but when she reached Whitehall she found some commotion there, for Charles was taking his departure from the palace, and people said he was on his way to the house of lords and that it was likely he had determined to let Strafford go.

In the evening she learned authoritatively the object of the king's visit to the house of lords. He had pleaded earnestly for the life of his minister, promising if he were released never again to employ him even in the meanest capacity. He implored them at least to grant a reprieve until Saturday, and this was so small a favor for a king to ask that Vollins was sure it would be granted and that many things might happen in the intervening days. The confidence of a man so generally despairing as Vollins in the certainty of a short reprieve and in the ultimate safety of Lord Strafford did much to bring the girl to a like belief, but she resolved nevertheless to see the king next day if she could win her way into Whitehall palace.

Wednesday saw no excitement on the streets. People were going soberly about, each on his own affairs, and the reprieve had provoked no outburst, which in itself was a hopeful sign. Frances had grown to fear the hue and cry of the mob even more than she feared the indecision of the king. If he were left untried, all his tendency was toward mercy and the keeping of his oath.

There was no crowd to distract the attention of the guard at the palace gates opening on Whitehall, and they absolutely refused to grant her admission without an order. She turned to the captain of the guard and asked how such an order could be obtained, and that official, apparently struck by her youth and beauty as well as her evident distress, said that if she knew any one about the court who might be sent for her he would allow her to pass. But the rule at the gate was strict because of past disturbances, and he had no option but refusal unless she went in under the convey of some one in authority. Frances pondered a few moments and hesitated, but her need was great, and she could not choose when it came to finding security. At last she said, with reluctance:

"I am acquainted with M. De Courcy. Is he within?"

"I do not know, but 'twill be speedily ascertained."

With that he invited her to a seat in the guardhouse and sent a messenger for De Courcy, knowing there would be prompt response when the Frenchman learned that a beautiful lady awaited him, and in this he was not mistaken. De Courcy came as debonair and as well groomed as usual, twirling his light moustache and doffing his hat with a grand air when he saw who his petitioner was.

"I wish to see his majesty again," said Frances, rising, "but they detain me at the gate, and I have no one to vouch for me unless you will be so kind, though I am sorry to trouble you."

"To pleasure me, mademoiselle, you must mean. 'Tis an ungallant country, as I have always said, when they keep so fair a maid awaiting."

Such a boorish act is not conceivable in France. Most honored am I to be your sponsor, and it gratifies me to tell you that the king is at present disengaged. I beg you to accompany me."

The friend of the queen did not even trouble to make any explanation to the captain of the guard, and he was too powerful a courtier to have anything he did questioned by the underlings. It was palpable that the officer had small liking for him, but wholesome fear of his influence in high places.

As the two crossed the yard together the young man said with the greatest affability:

"Would you prefer to see the king alone or in company?"

"Oh, alone, if it be possible."

"Quite possible. I shall delight in arranging a private interview and am sure his majesty will not refuse my request. If you do not wish to meet any of the court I can take you to him by a private route where we are almost certain to encounter none."

"I shall be deeply indebted to you." They threaded their way through devious and labyrinthine passages, turning now to the right, now to the left, sometimes ascending a few steps and sometimes a narrow stairway, until at last the guide came to a door, which he pushed open.

"If you will wait here for a moment, I will go and fetch the king." He bowed gracefully as she passed through the doorway, entering a square room, the walls of which were decorated by groups of swords and rapiers of various sorts; a veritable armory. A table occupied the center, and there were several chairs, with a lounge against the wall. De Courcy, instead of taking his departure, stepped in quickly after the girl, closed the door, and turned the key in the lock. With the grating of the key came the first suspicion to the mind of Frances that her guide was treacherous. Much as she had always distrusted him, it seemed incredible that, knowing her to be the daughter of the Earl of Strafford, anything disastrous might befall her here in the very palace of the king, the sworn protector of his people. The leer on De Courcy's face and his words speedily disillusioned her.

"If you will be seated, my dear, we may have some converse, interesting and entertaining to us both. You can scarcely imagine my joy at seeing so lovely a visitor in my poor apartments."

"Sir, you said you would bring the king. A gentleman keeps his word." "Oh, the king in good time, my pretty one. Charles is but a doleful companion just now, and we are well quit of him. As for a man's word, the fashion seems to be the breaking of it, in the highest places. For instance, our last discussion related to marriage, but times have changed since that day, and you will not be so cruel as to expect me to carry out the good domestic intentions I then expressed."

"Sir, I am very glad I shall hear no more of them."

"Truly? Then so much the better. I expected tears and reproaches, but am pleased you are not given to complaining. By my honor, I love you the more for it. So, then, I'll steal a kiss from those ripe lips to seal the new compact we are to make, and I warn you that a scream is not likely to be heard from this chamber."

"I need not your warning. You shall neither hear me scream nor see me weep."

"By St. Denis, I like your spirit. Some scream and some weep, but they all end by clinging."

"Sir, a warning for your warning. Approach not another step nearer me. Stand aside, rather, and allow me to quit this place as freely as I ignorantly came hither."

"And if I cannot consent?"

"Then 'twill be the worse for you."

"You spur an inclination already highly mettle. Still would I treat you with all courtesy. You are a nameless woman, and many of the highest dames in England are proud to call me their friend."

"That I believe to be as untrue as your saying I am a nameless woman."

"Nevertheless one is as true as the other. Your father never acknowledged you."

"He has been burdened with more important affairs, but he will do so when he is free."

During this dialogue the participants had been constantly changing their positions, De Courcy advancing and Frances retreating, keeping the table between them. The girl's design was plain enough. She desired to hold him in conversation, gradually shifting her position, until she got between him and the door, when a sudden dash might give her freedom. But he easily fathomed this design and laughed as he checked it. At her last words, however, he drew himself upright, a look of genuine amazement overspreading his face.

"When he is free," he echoed. "Powers of heaven! Then you have not come to reproach the king, but to plead with him?"

"Why should I reproach him?"

"It would surely be useless enough, but feminine. Why? Because Gregory Brandon, with one good stroke, severed the king's word and Strafford's neck on Tower hill this morning."

The girl's face went white as the kerchief about her throat, and, swaying half an instant, she leaned against the table for support. Something in the brutal method of the announcement convinced her of its truth more surely than if he had spoken with all the solemnity of which he might be capable. Yet she struggled not to believe.

"You are lying to me," she gasped. "Far from it, my little lady. How could I imagine you did not know? You are surely the only person in London who is ignorant of it. Why is everything so quiet near Whitehall, where the generous citizens have been so solicitous about us of late? Merely because the center of interest has changed to the other end of the town, and a rare show was put on the stage for all good people to see, free of cost to themselves, unless they have the brains to know of what they are bereft by Strafford's death, which is most unlikely."

As he spoke he had been edging toward her, catlike, but she paid no heed to him. Then with a spring he caught her wrists, but she did not move or make any effort to free herself. She looked dully at him, as if wondering why he acted so.

"You will be pleased to withdraw yourself, sir, and let me go. My heart is broken."

She spoke with forced calmness, but there was a tremor in her tone that cast doubt on her former assertion regarding the tears.

"COWARDLY POITROON, WEAR THE BRAND OF CAIN!"

"Your heart is not broken, and if it was I'd mend it for you. Absurd! Why, you knew the man for scarce a day, and that time is full short for the growth of any large affection."

"I shall never love any as I have loved him."

"Tush! How little you know of yourself. You are a very goddess of love, and I will!"

He released one wrist and endeavored to slip his disengaged arm about her waist. This seemed to rouse the girl from her stupor, for she suddenly thrust him back and, taking him unaware, sent him sprawling; then she sprang for the door. But he was as nimble as she, for, quickly recovering himself, he held her tight before she could turn the key.

"Sir, you forget who I am. Release me at once and molest me no further."

"Divinest of the fair, I swear to you."

She whisked herself free of him, and, darting to the other side of the room, whipped down a thin rapier from the wall.

"You will be well advised to put an end to this fooling. I am now in no humor for it, and with you—never. If you have not the gift to see it, I would have you know that I detest you and despise you, and have done so since first I saw you."

"Ah, my little Lady Termagant, you say as much now, but when the world knows you paid a thousand pounds for a lover there will be many envious persons who wish to be despised as much."

"You ruffian and thief! Well did Vollins estimate your honesty. But stand aside from that door or your stealing will profit you little."

"Indeed!" cried De Courcy, with a laugh, as he possessed himself of a similar weapon to that which threatened him. "Tis already squandered, and I am in sore need of a further installment. Are you for a duel, then?"

"If you are coward enough to lift blade to a woman."

"I meet kiss with kiss and steel with steel, always ready for either. Guard yourself, madam."

His pretended antagonism was but a feint to throw her off the guard he advised her to maintain, for, being one of the best swordsmen of his time, he knew by her holding of the blade that she was ignorant of its practice. He brushed her sword aside, dropped his own and sprang in upon her, grasping again her helpless wrists, her arms plied thus transversely across her body, her right hand still clinging to the useless hit, with the blade extending past her shoulder and behind her. His sneering, grinning face so close to hers that his breath fanned her cheek, he pressed her back and back against the wall, the sword bending and bending behind her until the blade snapped off some six inches from the hilt and fell ringing to the floor.

"There, sweetest of amazons, you are stingsless now, and nought but the honey is to be gathered."

The very ease with which he had overcome her hoodwinked him to his danger. The proud, dominant blood of the Wentworths flushed her face with an anger that steeled every nerve in her lithe body. As, with a victorious laugh, he released her wrists and slipped his arms around her she struck him twice with lightning swiftness, first across the brow, then down the face. Nothing could well be more terrible than the weapon she had used, for the jagged iron tore his flesh like the stroke of a tiger's claw. The red cross showed for a brief moment, then was obliterated in a crimson flood.

"Cowardly poitroon, wear the brand of Cain!"

He had warned her not to scream, but now his own cry did the room as he staggered back, his hands to his face. Yet, grievously wounded as he was, he seemed resolved she should not escape him and, after the first shock, groped blindly for her. She flung the broken weapon to the farther side of the room, and the noise of its fall turned him thither, striking against the table and then against a chair. She tiptoed cautiously to the door, turned the key and threw it open.

Both prowess and gentility were on the instant of being put to the test as he approached the inn, where a wayfarer is usually certain of a welcome if he has but money in his pouch. A lanceman, his tall weapon held upright, stepped out into the road from the front of the closed door before which he had been standing, when he saw that the traveler was about to halt and dismount.

"Ye'll be fur dawning' on a bit faurer foret," hinted the sentinel in a cautious, insinuating manner, as if he were but giving expression to the other's unspoken intention.

"A wise man halts at the first public house he comes to after the sun is down," replied Armstrong.

"Ah'm thinkin' a man's no verra wise that stops whaur he's least wanted, if them that's no wantin' him has good ale in their hauns."

"Aye, my lad, steel's a bonny argument, rightly used. What's a' th' steer here, that a tired man, willing to pay his way, is sent down th' road?"

"Weel, ye see, there's muckle folk in ben yonner that has mony a thing to chatter about, an' that's a' Ah ken o't, except that Ah'm ta let nane inside ta disturb them."

"Whose man are you?"

"Ah belong ta th' Yert o' Traquair."

"And a very good friend of mine the Earl of Traquair is. Will you just go inside and tell him William Armstrong is sitting here on his horse?"

"That will Ah no, fur if th' king himsel' were ta ask Ah munna let him by th' door. Sa just tak a fule's ad vice fur yince and gang awa' ta th' next inn afore it gets darker an' ye're like ta lose yer rod among th' hills."

"I must get something for my horse to eat. He's done and should not be pushed farther. I'll wait outside until their lordships have finished their council."

"Th' stalls are a' fou already, an', if not wi' better nags, at least wi' the nags o' noblemen, an' Ah'm thinkin' that's nether you nor me."

"The stalls may be fou, but my beast's empty, and I must get a feed of corn, noble or simple. Ye tell the carl it's me and ye'll be thankin'."

"Indeed, me braw man, Ah tak' orders frae the yerl himsel' an' frae nane else. Jist ticket yer beast wi' th' spur, or Ah'll gie him a jab wi' th' point of this spear."

The descent of young Armstrong was so instantaneous that the man at arms had no opportunity of carrying out his threat or even of leveling the unwieldy weapon in his own defense. The horseman dropped on him as if he had fallen from the clouds, and the pike rang useless on the rough cobblestones. The black horse showed no sign of fright, as might have been expected, but turned his intelligent head and calmly watched the fray as if accustomed to any eccentricity on the part of his master. And what the fine ears of the quadruped saw was startling enough. The wide spread limbs of the surprised soldier went whirling through the air like the arms of a windmill in a gale.

Armstrong had grasped him by the waist and turned him end for end, revolving him, Catherine-wheel-wise, until the bewildered wits of the victim threatened to leave him through the action of centrifugal force. By the time the unfortunate sentinel lost all reckoning of the direction in which his solid earth lay with regard to his own swiftly changing position he found himself on his assailant's shoulder, gazing like a newly landed trout, and, thus hoisted aloft, he was carried to the closed door, which a kick from Armstrong's foot sent crashing inward. The intruder flung his burden into the nearest corner of the large room as if he were a sack of corn. Then, facing the startled audience, the young man cried:

"Strong orders should have a stronger guard than you set, gentlemen. I hold to the right of every Scotsman to enter a public dram shop when he pleases."

A dozen amazed men had sprung to their feet, oversetting a chair or a stool here and there behind them. Here and there a flagon before them. Eleven swords flashed out, but the upraised

CHAPTER IX.

WILLIAM ARMSTRONG rode his splendid black steed like one now accustomed to the polished of saddle leather than to the wearing out of the same material in the form of boots. Horse and man were so subtly suited, each to each, that such another pair might well have given to some early artist the first idea of a centaur. Armstrong was en-dently familiar with the district he traversed, for he evinced no surprise when, coming to the crown of a height, he saw in the valley below him a one storied stone building, whose out-houses and general surroundings proclaimed it a solitary inn, but the horse, self contained and doubtless more fatigued, thrust forward his ears and gave utterance to a faint whinny of pleasure at the near prospect of rest and refreshment. The hand of the rider affectionately stroked and patted the long black mane, as if in silent corroboration of the animal's eager anticipations.

The young man was as fair as his mount was dark. A mass of yellow hair flowed out from under his Scotch bonnet and over his broad shoulders. A heavy blood moustache gave him a semimilitary air, a look of the cavalier, as if he were a remnant of that stricken band across the border which was fighting for King Charles against daily increasing odds; but something of jaunty self confidence in Armstrong's manner betokened that the civil war raging in England was no concern of his, or that, if he took any interest in it, his sympathies inclined toward the winning side, as indeed was the case with many of his countrymen. His erect bearing, body straight as one of his native pines, enhanced the soldier-like appearance of the horseman, and it needed but a glance at his clear skinned but resolute face and powerful frame to be convinced that he would prove a dangerous antagonist to meet in combat, while the radiant good nature of his frank countenance indicated a merciful conqueror should victory fall to him, as seemed likely unless the odds were overwhelming.

Both prowess and gentility were on the instant of being put to the test as he approached the inn, where a wayfarer is usually certain of a welcome if he has but money in his pouch. A lanceman, his tall weapon held upright, stepped out into the road from the front of the closed door before which he had been standing, when he saw that the traveler was about to halt and dismount.

A dozen amazed men had sprung to their feet, oversetting a chair or a stool here and there behind them. Here and there a flagon before them. Eleven swords flashed out, but the upraised right hand of the chairman and his commanding voice caused the weapons to hang suspended.

"The very man! The very man we want! Will, where have you dropped from?"

"From the back of my horse a moment since, as your henchman here will bear witness, Traquair."

"Armstrong, your arrival at this juncture is providential. That's what it is, providential!"

"It must be, my lord, for you did your best to prevent it. Your stout pikeman would not even let you know I was within call, so I just brought him in to give the message properly."

The sentinel had by this time got on his feet and was staring at the company like one dazed.

"Where's your pike?" demanded Traquair.

"On the staves outside, my lord."

"Very well, go out and lift it, and see that you hold a better grip of it when the next man comes along. Attend to Armstrong's horse and keep an eye up and down the road."

"I'll look after my own beast, Traquair."

"No need for that, Will. We have matters of importance to discuss, and Angus here will feed the horse as well as you can do it."

"I'll eat and drink whatever's set before me and never ask who's the cook, but I trust no man to wait on my horse. You bid by your sentry march, Angus, and I'll see to the beast."

With this Armstrong strode out of the house, the ill used sentinel following him. As the door closed the interrupted hum of conversation rose again. Who the interloper might be was the burden of the inquiry.

"Armstrong's the very man for our purpose," said Traquair. "If any one can get through Old Noll's armies by craft or by force it is Will. I had no idea he was near by or I would never have wasted thought on any other. I have known him for years, and there's none to match him, hielan' or lowlan'."

We need seek nae farrair if Christie's Will is wullin'. I wish unanimous consent to tender our present dangerous mission to William Armstrong in the hope that he may get safely to Oxford and, what is more important, bring us with equal safety the king's written command. If any of you have some one else to propose whom you think may accomplish his business better than Will Armstrong, I ask you to nominate the man and give reasons for your preference."

Each man looked at the others as if waiting for some one else to make further suggestion, but as the silence was prolonged the earl was about to address the company when the door opened and Armstrong himself entered.

A TRUTHFUL INDIAN.

He Didn't Get Tired Like the Rest, For a Very Good Reason.

Clement Scott, the English dramatic critic, took a profound interest in the American Indian. He had at his tongue's tip a hundred incidents whereby to illustrate odd phases of the Indian's character.

"There was a farmer in the west who was hard put to it for help upon his farm. Indians were plentiful in the neighborhood, but they were poor workmen. Always tired, they would put down the hoe or rake as soon as the master's back was turned, and, selecting a cool spot, they would lie down on the grass and sleep the day away."

"But one morning a very tall, robust Indian asked the farmer to give him work."

"No," said the white man, "you will get tired. You Indians are always getting tired."

"Oh, no," said the other. "This Indian never gets tired. This Indian not like the rest."

"Well, I'll try you," said the farmer, and he engaged the man. He put him to work in a wheatfield; then he went away for an hour or two. When he returned he found the Indian asleep under a tree.

"Here, wake up here," he cried. "You told me you never got tired."

"Tigh," said the other, yawning, "this Indian don't. But if he not lie down often he would get tired just the same as the rest."

A FRIGHTFUL DEATH

Augustus P. Stine, Aged Man of Granville, Father of Mrs. Follett Crushed Beneath Wheels of an Electric Car Wednesday Morning.

Granville, O., Aug. 17.—The most frightful accident that ever happened on the Newark and Granville electric railway, occurred on Wednesday morning shortly after 10 o'clock, about one mile east of this place. In which Mr. Augustus P. Stine, one of Granville's oldest and most highly respected citizens, sustained injuries which resulted fatally in a short time after the accident. Mr. Stine, who was about 76 years of age, has been making his home with his daughter, Mrs. Dr. A. Follett, in this place, for some time. This morning he had occasion to go to the farm, one mile east of the village. About 10 o'clock he started to drive home, and had just emerged from the lane on to the main road, when he was struck by an east-bound electric car. The car struck the rear end of the wagon, mashing it into kindling wood, and throwing Mr. Stine beneath the wheels. The motorman, who had done all in his power to avert the accident, managed to bring his car to a stop, and Dr. A. T. Speer of Newark, who was on the car, made an examination of the injuries that had been sustained by the unfortunate man, and at once saw that they were of a fatal nature. Although everything possible was done for him. The injured man was taken to the home of Dr. A. K. Follett in Granville, where he died in about half an hour.

No arrangements have been made for the funeral.

GAS FIELD

SOUTH OF UNION STATION IS MOST PROMISING.

Heisey Company of Newark, Is Largely Interested in this New Territory—Four Producing Wells.

Union Station, Aug. 17.—There continues to be a good flow from the Squire Jones gas well, estimated today at 4,000,000 feet per day. There are now five wells in this territory and only one dry hole has been encountered, on the Carl I. Price place three-fourths of a mile west of Union Station. The producers are on Willis Lee's place, one mile south of Union, at D. Taylor's on the Lancaster road, one and one-half miles south, the Squire Jones well one mile southwest, and on Nelson Buckland's place one mile south of town.

A Columbus company is now down 1,500 feet in the well on Frank Hill-trant's farm, and is going to put a rig on the J. C. Hardy farm. The Heisey company of Newark is going to put a rig on Grover Alltop's farm. The Heisey company has four wells and the Columbus company is looking for more rigs. The pressure at the Jones well Sunday was sufficient to blow 500 feet of tubing over the derrick. Both companies have large tracts of land under lease, the price paid being $1 per acre when the lease covers a large tract, a higher rate being paid for smaller tracts. The development of the field has been going on only about six months and the outlook is most promising.

INSURANCE

FOR EMPLOYES OF THE TRACTION COMPANIES.

Officers Incorporate Two Associations to Insure the Lives of Their Workmen.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 17.—Two mutual insurance companies have just been incorporated at Columbus by officers of 12 traction companies. The incorporators are local capitalists, but their plans provide for making the new company national and even international in its scope, for Canada is to be included. Under the names of the Electric Mutual Insurance company and the Traction Mutual Insurance company the two organizations will carry all of the risks of traction companies and electric light and power companies.

The purpose primarily is to reduce the cost of insurance to electric companies by doing away with all underwriting by outside stock companies. Both concerns will be under one head, and Horace E. Andrews, president of the Cleveland Electric company, will probably be chosen for that office.

The first named company will be restricted to risks on electric light and power plants, while the latter will assume traction risks alone. The incorporators are: H. E. Andrews, who is president of not only the city lines, but also the Attica and Mohawk Valley Railway company; H. J. Davis, of the Cleveland Electric Railway; H. A. Everett, of the Northern Ohio Traction company, Detroit Railway company; Luther Allen, of the Toledo & Western Railway company; A. E. Akins, F. T. Pomeroy, of the Cleveland Southwestern Traction; Warren Bicknell, F. W. Coons, of the Lake Shore Electric; George L. Bishop, of the Eastern Ohio Traction and the Northern Texas Traction, and Charles E. Wagon, of the Cleveland, Painesville & Eastern.

These companies will form the nucleus of the first business of the two new companies, placing in both $40,000,000 of insurance. All risks will be of the same class and interested parties will not be called upon to pay outside losses. Commissions will be done away with and the profits will go to the members. Henry N. Staats will probably be the manager, he being at present manager of the Factory Mutual Insurance company of New England. The idea is his and the plan has been successful in the East.

An observer says that every year the people of the South are becoming less and less addicted to the use of spirituous liquors.
